About the Equity and Social Justice Institute

The Network's day-long institute focuses on equity and social justice in education with a follow-up session that is designed to deepen learning about equity and social justice. These institutes have been purposefully planned to precede attendance at the Network's Beyond Diversity I Seminar so that anyone new to engaging in conversations about equity and disproportionality can build the necessary background for courageous conversations. Participants who have previously attended Beyond Diversity are welcome to join us at the institutes and continue with your journey.

The Equity and Social Justice Institutes will help participants explore the meaning of social justice and examine how power and privilege play out in society and, more specifically, in education. Participants will have an opportunity to explore how their multiple identities related to race, gender, sexual orientation, religion, social class, ability, etc. intersect in both their lives and the lives of their students. Participants will be encouraged to examine the inequities that play out in schools and collaborate to find effective ways to create more equitable institutions that serve all students.

Explore Answers to the following Questions:

- What is the difference between equality and equity?
- What are the circumstances that create barriers for success in schools?
- What can we do to effectively challenge systems that create inequality or inequity?
- How can we become more culturally responsive to serve an increasingly diverse student population in the 21st Century?

Examine and Discuss the following Topics:

- Establishing protocols for engaging in conversations
- Jim Crow: Revisiting the historical perspective
- Privilege and Power: How both influence your interactions with students
- Intersectionality and identity
- Examining social justice in classroom practices
- Stereotype Threat

Participant Outcomes

As a result of participating in this institute, attendees will:

- Explore the definitions of social justice and equity and how the concepts play out in their classrooms and schools;
- Examine the inequities that students may be experiencing in their classrooms and schools;
- Build an understanding of intersectionality and examine what it looks like for themselves and their students.
